A Few Words About State Politics. If there is a single reason why the state of Missouri should go Democratic this year or why she should not go Republican. The Tribune has yet to hear offered or to see it in print. Two years ago this commonwealth headed the list of those states that cast their electoral votes for Bryan and Sewell, and her people elected Democratic state officers and a Democratic legislature. The result has been anything but satisfactory or creditable to those who brought about these results.

But what arguments can the silver advocates | offer this year why she should repeat her action of two years ago? The silver arguments of '96 have been wholly dis credited by events, the awful predictions of silver sages have come to naught; their theories on finance have been made ridiculous by circumstances that they found impossible of control, and so disreputable has the whole silver-repudiation "cause" become, that it At the close of the campaign of 1896, is seldom mentioned any more excepting when the voters thought they had dis by cranks and candidates who have posed of the silver question, the more wrapped up in it all their hopes of offirive it in 1898 and sweep the country talk about the gold standard being resthe beauties of the theory they pre- bave dropped out of view, and the na the leading parts in this campaign.

Some one, no doubt a free comage enthusinst, suggests that the Santiago storekeepers be compelled to accept the silver dollar on the same basis as other American money. A better plan, however, than putting the solver dollar into foreign circulation at the point of the bayonet would be to try first to lead the Cuban mind up to the financial heights achieved in the Chicago platform. Mr. Bryar is still alive, and might be placed in charge of the campaign of education. He could call together the merchants of Santiago and assure them that the decline of silver is due to a legislative crime committed in the United States in 1873, and that since that time everything has gone wrong throughout the world, prices

So far as the active operations of a campaign are concerned, he is indispensible, for the fatigues of marching, the exposures of camp ife, tell severely upon men even in early middle life. Young men are necessary, therefore, to fill the ranks, to bear the burden and heat of the day, to do, the active work of campaigning, of watch ing and of fighting.

"Old men for counsel, young men for war."

There are many instances in the miliary history of our own and other countries, of men of distinction whose careers began with some feat of daring closely analogous to that which won for Hobson promotion and reputation. Decatur was only 25 years of age when be distinguished himself. Oliver Hazard Perry was only a heuenant when he won the glorious victory known in our history as the battle of Lake Erie. Washington was only 22 when he achieved a success which gave him a reputation throughout the country. Keats was only 2º when he distin guished himself by some of his best works. Moore was admired all over the English-speaking world before he was as old as Hobson. Charles Fox was not 20 when his first success in parliament was recorded. Edison was a beardless youth when his first inventions astonished the electricians. On the other hand, there are many men whose mental growth is gradual, and he who concludes that all geniuses develop early is likely to fall into error. There, for example, is our own Dewey, who is over 60 years of age, and who has ascended to his present station by the slow process of gradual promotion.
